Under the Mine Ban Treaty, victims are defined as those who are directly impacted and therefore have been killed by a landmine blast or survived one, as well as the surviving family members of those killed and injured. Under the Convention on Cluster Munitions, victims were defined as family members and affected communities. Throughout this document, ‘victims’ refers to survivors, family members of those affected and affected communities; ‘casualties’ refers to those directly killed or injured by blasts; while ‘survivors’ specifically refers to those who have been directly impacted and survived landmines/Explosive Remnants of Wars.

‘Mines’ include victim-activated anti-personnel mines, anti-vehicle mines and improvised explosive devices; 2010 is the most recent year for which verified casualty totals were available for all countries at the time of publication.

See <www.the-monitor.org>, accessed 31 January 2013, for a full definition of casualties and devices as presented here and for updated casualty data.
